

FOR CLIENTS WORKING ON WORRY CONTAINMENT AND PERSPECTIVE-TAKING

Anxious thinking & worry

Your interventions stay yours. This use plan is a recommended structure for InkWell to support your client's work between sessions, and everything in it runs on the free tier.

Goal

A contained daily worry practice with a hard time boundary, structured perspective-taking after anxious moments, and in-the-moment capture that gets a looping thought out of the client's head and onto the page. You review adherence through a client-shared Practice Summary.

How to use this plan

- 1 Match it to your work. Page 2 is the client's take-home: a daily worry window plus supports, each mapped to a common between-session assignment. Adjust the window length and cadence to fit your intervention; this is a starting structure, not a prescription.
- 2 Introduce it in session. The client downloads InkWell free on web, iOS, or Android, and you walk the take-home page together. A way to say it is below.
- 3 Review together. After a week or two of use, the client emails themselves a Practice Summary and forwards it to you. What it shows, and what it never includes, is in the Practice Summary box below.

A WAY TO SAY IT

"Between sessions, I'd like you to try a journaling app called InkWell. It's free, and this page shows exactly how we'll use it. The main piece is a daily worry window: fifteen minutes where worry gets your full attention on the page, so it has less reason to follow you through the rest of the day. Your writing stays yours unless you choose to share it. We'll look at how it went next time."

What the Practice Summary shows you

- Days journaled and cadence over 7, 30, or 90 days
- Practice mix: how often Sprint, Reframe, and voice capture were used
- Writing rhythm: when entries happen across the day
- Self-rated FeelCheck shift once enough pairs exist

Client-generated, sent to the client's own email, forwarded to you by the client. Usage patterns only; entry text, titles, and tags are never included.

Scope

- Not crisis care, and no substitute for crisis services or your clinical judgment
- Not treatment: InkWell is a wellness journaling tool and doesn't diagnose or treat
- Not a medical record: the Practice Summary is a client-shared usage snapshot
- The free tier is complete; nothing in this plan requires the client to pay

YOUR TAKE-HOME PLAN · THE WORRY WINDOW

Your week with InkWell

Your practitioner uses InkWell to give the work you do together somewhere to live between sessions. The heart of this plan is a daily worry window: one contained time each day where worry gets your full attention, so it has less reason to follow you everywhere else.

The plan

WHEN	WHAT TO DO
Daily, 15 min	Worry window (Sprint): pick a time that's yours. Start a Sprint and give your worries the full fifteen minutes on the page. When the timer ends, the window closes until tomorrow.
After an anxious moment	Reframe: a guided four-step practice that helps you look at the moment from a different angle, in your own words.
In the moment, as needed	Voice capture: when a worry loops and you can't write, talk it out. InkWell turns it into a clean entry you can bring to your next worry window.
Optional, per practice	FeelCheck: rate how heavy things feel, 1 to 5, before and after a practice. It's a feeling, not a grade; it helps you notice what shifts.

Good to know

- Missed a day? That's normal, and nothing is lost. Open the app and write when you're back.
- Worries showing up outside the window? Expected. Capture them in a quick note and let tomorrow's window handle them.
- This plan is a best-possible week, not a test. Some weeks you'll do all of it, some weeks one entry. All of it counts.
- Your words stay yours. The summary you can share with your practitioner shows patterns only, never what you wrote.
