

FOR CLIENTS WORKING ON RUMINATION, SELF-CRITICAL LOOPS, OR PERSPECTIVE-TAKING

Rumination & self-criticism

Your interventions stay yours. This use plan is a recommended structure for InkWell to support your client's work between sessions, and everything in it runs on the free tier.

Goal

In-the-moment externalizing of ruminative loops, structured perspective-taking on the captured content, and a weekly positive-affect practice as counterweight to the self-critical voice. You review adherence through a client-shared Practice Summary and work the captured material in session.

How to use this plan

- 1 Match it to your work. Page 2 is the client's take-home: catch the loop, then work it, each step mapped to a common between-session assignment. Adjust cadence and emphasis to fit your intervention; this is a starting structure, not a prescription.
- 2 Introduce it in session. The client downloads InkWell free on web, iOS, or Android, and you walk the take-home page together. A way to say it is below.
- 3 Review together. After a week or two of use, the client emails themselves a Practice Summary and forwards it to you. What it shows, and what it never includes, is in the Practice Summary box below.

A WAY TO SAY IT

"Between sessions, I'd like you to try a journaling app called InkWell. It's free, and this page shows exactly how we'll use it. The main move is simple: when a loop starts, get it out of your head and onto the page. A loop on the page is smaller than a loop in your head. Your writing stays yours unless you choose to share it. We'll look at how it went next time."

What the Practice Summary shows you

- Days journaled and cadence over 7, 30, or 90 days
- Practice mix: how often quick capture, Reframe, and gratitude were used
- Writing rhythm and word-count trend
- Self-rated FeelCheck shift once enough pairs exist

Client-generated, sent to the client's own email, forwarded to you by the client. Usage patterns only; entry text, titles, and tags are never included.

Scope

- Not crisis care, and no substitute for crisis services or your clinical judgment
- Not treatment: InkWell is a wellness journaling tool and doesn't diagnose or treat
- Not a medical record: the Practice Summary is a client-shared usage snapshot
- The free tier is complete; nothing in this plan requires the client to pay

YOUR TAKE-HOME PLAN · WORKING WITH THOUGHT LOOPS

Your week with InkWell

Your practitioner uses InkWell to give the work you do together somewhere to live between sessions. The heart of this plan is one move: when a loop starts, get it out of your head and onto the page.

The plan

WHEN	WHAT TO DO
When a loop starts	Catch it (quick capture): the moment you notice the loop, get it onto the page. Type it or speak it. A loop on the page is smaller than a loop in your head.
Later that day, 5–10 min	Reframe: take one captured loop through the guided four-step practice and look at it from a different angle, in your own words.
Once a week	Kindness practice: InkWell's rotating gratitude practices turn the attention you usually spend on your flaws toward what's actually working.
Optional, per practice	FeelCheck: rate how heavy things feel, 1 to 5, before and after a practice. It's a feeling, not a grade; it helps you notice what shifts.

Good to know

- Missed a day? That's normal, and nothing is lost. Open the app and write when you're back.
- This plan is a best-possible week, not a test. Some weeks you'll do all of it, some weeks one entry. All of it counts.
- Caught a loop late? Still counts. Naming it hours afterward is the practice working.
- Your words stay yours. The summary you can share with your practitioner shows patterns only, never what you wrote.
