

FOR CLIENTS WORKING ON SLEEP, WIND-DOWN ROUTINES, OR CBT-I HOMEWORK

Sleep & wind-down

Your interventions stay yours. This use plan is a recommended structure for InkWell to support your client's work between sessions, and everything in it runs on the free tier.

Goal

A consistent evening wind-down: a contained worry offload earlier in the evening, a warmer final entry before bed, and out-of-bed capture for racing thoughts. It runs alongside your sleep work; the sleep diary, restriction, and stimulus-control pieces stay yours. You review adherence through a client-shared Practice Summary.

How to use this plan

- 1 Match it to your work. Page 2 is the client's take-home: an evening closing-the-day session plus supports, each mapped to a common sleep assignment. Set the timing to fit the client's sleep window; this is a starting structure, not a prescription.
- 2 Introduce it in session. The client downloads InkWell free on web, iOS, or Android, and you walk the take-home page together. A way to say it is below.
- 3 Review together. After a week or two of use, the client emails themselves a Practice Summary and forwards it to you. What it shows, and what it never includes, is in the Practice Summary box below.

A WAY TO SAY IT

"Between sessions, I'd like you to try a journaling app called InkWell. It's free, and this page shows exactly how we'll use it. The main piece happens well before bed: about fifteen minutes closing out the day on the page, so it doesn't reopen when the lights go off. Your writing stays yours unless you choose to share it. We'll look at how it went next time."

What the Practice Summary shows you

- Days journaled and cadence over 7, 30, or 90 days
- Practice mix: how often Sprint, gratitude, and voice capture were used
- Writing rhythm and word-count trend
- Self-rated FeelCheck shift once enough pairs exist

Client-generated, sent to the client's own email, forwarded to you by the client. Usage patterns only; entry text, titles, and tags are never included.

Scope

- Not crisis care, and no substitute for crisis services or your clinical judgment
- Not treatment: InkWell is a wellness journaling tool and doesn't diagnose or treat
- Not a medical record: the Practice Summary is a client-shared usage snapshot
- The free tier is complete; nothing in this plan requires the client to pay

YOUR TAKE-HOME PLAN · SLEEP & WIND-DOWN

Your week with InkWell

Your practitioner uses InkWell to give the work you do together somewhere to live between sessions. The heart of this plan is closing the day on the page, well before bed, so it doesn't reopen when the lights go off.

The plan

WHEN	WHAT TO DO
Early evening, 15 min	Closing the day (Sprint): well before bed, write out tomorrow's worries and one next step for each. When the timer ends, the day's business lives on the page, not in your head.
Nightly, 2–3 min	Wind-down note: a short, warm entry as part of your wind-down, before you get into bed. InkWell's gratitude practices work well here: three good things, or one moment savored slowly.
If your mind races at night	Voice capture: step out of bed, talk the thought out, and let it become a clean note for tomorrow's closing session (a notepad by the bed works too). Then bed is just for sleeping.
Optional, per practice	FeelCheck: rate how heavy things feel, 1 to 5, before and after a practice. It's a feeling, not a grade; it helps you notice what shifts.

Good to know

- Missed a day? That's normal, and nothing is lost. Open the app and write when you're back.
- This plan is a best-possible week, not a test. Some weeks you'll do all of it, some weeks one entry. All of it counts.
- Thoughts after lights-out? Capture them out of bed and hand them to tomorrow. They will keep.
- Your words stay yours. The summary you can share with your practitioner shows patterns only, never what you wrote.
